The Lion Hunt The Lion Hunt is an episode of the British sitcom, Dinnerladies. The episode aired on 14 January 2008. The episode sees all the girls at work go on a mysterious prank call to the women's toilets at the Debenhams department store in Holborn, London. Synopsis The episode opens with Clare showing April and her friend Caroline a video of The Lion Hunt that she had seen on her laptop. The girls decide to go out for a drink after work, but are advised to wait for the group to get back so they can go out with them. While waiting, April is feeling rather jumpy due to her unsuccessful attempt at following the girls the previous day, and feels grateful that the toilet is now locked from the inside. While in the toilet, April is troubled by flashing lights from the shop across the road, but the lights are soon revealed to be one of the girls taking a photo of herself. Although the girls are supposed to be going on a 'spree' for the day, they seem less forthcoming with their motives as the day progresses. A little while later, when the girls are actually going out, most of them manage to avoid April and Caroline, except for Sophie, who is the sister of Pauline. Sophie manages to pull the other two along with her to a security guard's van, where they are subjected to a number of pranks, including drinking a urine sample, having their tongues poked with a corkscrew, and having a urine-soaked snake rubbed against their faces. The girls are eventually discovered by a store assistant, who sends them back to the ladies' toilet, and April is the last to discover them. The episode then shifts focus to April, who is looking through her day planner trying to figure out what she will be doing on her week off. As she lays out her plans, she notices Pauline and Sophie's phone number scribbled in her calendar. She then calls them, asking them if she can come along with them on the prank, which she does not expect them to agree to. Nevertheless, the trio arrive at the women's toilets. They find that there is no need to go through the store from the ladies' toilet, as it is known to be manned by women, and it will therefore be easy to enter. However, once in the ladies' toilet, they find a locked door on the inside of the toilet cubicle. April opens the door and finds a group of four women,

He'd looked like a corpse. A garbage-can corpse. It had been a long time since I'd seen him on ESPN. A long time. But it was exactly like an ESPN broadcast, only in that short time I'd seen him, his football career had ended in disgrace. From what I understood, he'd been abusing an NCAA rule, allowing someone to pay him and promising to deliver a recruit to a specific school. He'd been suspended for 12 games, and in that time, he'd enrolled at a small school in Illinois. I couldn't remember which one, but that didn't matter. I knew he'd thrown a school's season to the wind and decided to give college a try. He'd even managed to get a degree by the end of the school year. That was quite the u-turn, I couldn't help but think. A guy who had made no secret of his goal of securing a professional football contract. Who'd immediately declared himself the most wanted NFL prospect in the country. Who'd been the No. 1 draft pick in his class. A player who'd been paid by an NCAA school but was forced to stop play for his own school. A player who'd had a career ending scandal. Nobody is who they appear. Not even in the most extreme cases. But when you're a coaching wannabe, chances are you aren't that alone. As the saying goes, nobody is who they appear. Not even in the most extreme cases. My first experience of the reality of being a coach was the first year I was in a completely new town. A new location, a new school. A place where the previous coach hadn't even lasted a year. He'd been fired -- via a player revolt, mind you -- but he had been "interim" or "interim head coach" for all of 10 days before being canned by a school that is apparently desperate for attention from the NCAA. I got a call from my first school's athletic director, who told me my new head coach had just come in from a former school, an FCS school, and he wasn't sure how he'd do. I told him I didn't care how my new coach had done in the past, I was willing to give him a chance. I called a bunch of former players I thought would be good fits for him. I talked to a friend who had coached at a FBS school and he said that while
